Graduate Teaching Community (GTC)

Join the UC Davis Graduate Teaching Community! Meet and collaborate with other graduate students and postdoctoral scholars interested in teaching and learning.

What is the Graduate Teaching Community (GTC)?

The Graduate Teaching Community (GTC) is an interdisciplinary, collaborative group where graduate students and postdoctoral scholars explore teaching practices and discuss teaching experiences. At the GTC, you can learn about relevant teaching and learning topics, freely discuss your ideas about teaching, and continue developing your own personal teaching style with your peers in a supportive environment. The Graduate Teaching Community meets weekly throughout the year.

What are the benefits of participating in the Graduate Teaching Community (GTC)?

When you participate in the GTC, you become part of an inclusive community of peers who are interested in learning about and discussing teaching and learning. Participating in the GTC is a great way to network with fellow graduate students, increase your knowledge about teaching, and give and get teaching support in a friendly, collegial atmosphere. Participants have the opportunity to receive a certificate as a result of participating in the GTC for at least one full quarter.

Where can I get more information about the Graduate Teaching Community?

For more information, visit the GTC page on the website of the Center for Educational Effectiveness at bit.ly/CEEGTC or come to the first meeting of the quarter, which is generally held during Week 2. You can also e-mail CEE at CEE@ucdavis.edu or call CEE at (530) 752-6050 for more information.
